Journal of the Society of Christian Philosophers
The two chapters in the second section of Jesus and Philosophy explore the connection between Jesus and the philosophy of Aristotle and the Stoics. The arguments on both chapters ends in a note on the following.

The connection between Jesus and the philosophy of Aristotle and the Stoics is a part of broader practice of both the Christian and the Hellenistic schools. The Christian school, which is the focus of this chapter, takes place in the context of the Hellenistic world and considers the teachings of Jesus in the context of Greek philosophy. The chapter concludes with a discussion of the impact of Jesus on modern philosophy and its influence on contemporary thought.
Christian philosophers provide significant food for thought for those who are, in some sense, good in this chapter. Whether or not they are correct, however and good philosophy as a key feature of disciplines and the related issues raised by religious studies, Christian thought, and philosophy. Philosophers write

The chapters in Jesus and Philosophy explore the relationship between Jesus and philosophy, in order to locate the individual's place in the Christian community. This book is recommended for those who are interested in the con-
